

Newsletter June 2026

We've fixed a small but statistically significant omission.

Enjoy the quiz, and happy summer!

In this quiz:

- What is becoming more concentrated as firms grow larger—and what is not?
- Why can “investing in what you know” backfire?
- How did corporate finance training affect firms in Mozambique?
- What happens when pollution taxes push firms to invest in R&D?
- Why might Europe's equity markets still look more like 20–25 local markets than one pan-European market?

This month, the Swedish House of Finance (SHoF) newsletter looks a little different.

Instead of the usual monthly roundup, SHoF is closing the season with a quiz based on research, events, interviews, and podcasts published over the past six months.

How closely have you followed the work coming out of SHoF?

The quiz takes just a few minutes. Some answers may be obvious. Others may send you back into the archive.

Take the quiz

Thank you for following SHoF this year. Regular newsletters will return after the summer!

Items mentioned:

- Central Questions EP 2: Are Giant Companies Rewriting Capitalism?
- Central Questions EP 1: Financial Literacy Isn't the Issue. The Advice Industry Could Be
- CFOs Confront AI, Tighter Capital and a Broader Mandate at SHoF Forum
- How Financial Education Transformed Corporate Decision-Making in Mozambique
- Europe's Savings and Investment Union Faces Test of Scale, Trust, and Political Will

- Can Bank Regulation Be Simpler Without Being Weaker? Pollution Taxes Push High-Emitting Firms to Invest in R&D
- When Innovation Goes Private, Wealth Concentrates at the Top
- Liquidity, Market Structure, and Europe's Capital Markets: What the Data Really Show

SWEDISH HOUSE
OF FINANCE

